China
In the Garden of Civilizations

China is a land. China is a people. China is a civilization — one flower among many in the splendid garden of humanity.

For centuries, flowers have enriched the Chinese culture and inspired the Chinese imagination. We name colors after them: peach pink, lotus white, and osmanthus gold. We mark seasons by their bloom: Peach blossoms welcome the spring breeze, lotus flowers brighten the summer sun, chrysanthemums grace the autumn moon, and plum blossoms brave the winter frost. In painting, poetry, calligraphy, and the art of living, flowers are cherished not only for their fragrance and grace, but for the spirit and values they embody.

Beneath the love of flowers lies a timeless wisdom: a single flower does not make spring. For thousands of years, Chinese civilization has valued harmony without uniformity, upholding respect for diversity and dialogue between cultures. This belief continues to shape China's view of the world today. In an era when nations are more interconnected than ever, no country can flourish in isolation. Through partnerships across regions — in infrastructure and trade, food security and public health, climate action and clean energy — China works with other countries to address shared challenges and promote prosperity for all.

Across the centuries, Chinese civilization has added its own color and fragrance to humanity's garden. China grows beside other flowers — roots deep in the same earth, faces lifted to the same sun. In this garden of civilizations, when many flowers bloom together, beauty belongs to all!
